Beaufort County Community College Goes On-Line

Readers can now access BCCC news on-line via the Beaufort County Community College World Wide Web Internet site. The BCCC web site includes weekly news releases, monthly issues of the campus newspaper, information about the BCCC Foundation, the College catalog, and the library.

Sherry Faithful, director of public relations and communications, says, "The BCCC web site is intended to supplement traditional means of disseminating information to our students, faculty, staff, and the public. Having information on-line such as the College catalog allows students to access information 24 hours a day, seven days a week."

Students may also find it beneficial to have 24-hour access to the BCCC library through the Internet. The library web page provides information about the services and materials available in the library, links to other Internet sites, and a tutorial/pathfinder for student orientation. The tutorial gives step-by-step instructions for accessing and using the card catalog and on-line databases. Students and other patrons can use this site as a source of information about the library and as a connecting point to diverse sites around the world.

Eventually, the BCCC web site will support links to each College department and academic division. The Universal Resource Locator (URL) address to access the BCCC web site is http://www.beaufort.cc.nc.us.
